Wizard Learning launches online technical training system

Wizard Learning has launched a unique and innovative technical training and competence system aimed at arming advisers with the flexibility to set up individual training plans based on knowledge gaps identified through the end of course final assessments.

The Technical Training and Competence (TT&C) system includes online core subject text based learning and assessment material for the four topic areas of regulation, investment, protection and retirement planning. It also consists of monthly online continued professional development (CPD) notes and assessments in addition to regular 40 question assessments covering all the four courses aforementioned.

The system is available for a regular monthly fee of just £15 (including VAT) per user. The monthly fee will help advisers to spread costs whilst still gaining access to a highly informative and relevant set of CPD and assessment material.

Mike Goldsmith, Managing Director at Wizard Learning, commented:

“Advisers are striving to get ahead in these challenging market conditions and have been crying out for an affordable system that enables them to not only achieve and maintain specific levels of competence set out by the regulator but to exceed them. We firmly believe that we have come up with such a system and even though it is early days we are already experiencing unprecedented demand.”

Alan Moran, Chartered Financial Planner at Interface Financial Planning Limited, commented

“I have been searching for a product like this for what seems like an age. I was lucky enough to be one of the first to sign up for the technical training & competence system and I certainly haven't been disappointed. I love the payment method and at £15 a month I will continue indefinitely, in fact, in my humble opinion signing up to the system is a no-brainer.”
